ABSTRACT

A method for enabling software to operate with hardware includes receiving a license key that has information regarding hardware configuration, software configuration, license key transaction history and license key warranty period. A software configuration is determined from the license key. It is then determined if the software configuration is within the license key warranty period. If it is the software is enabled with a time stamp based on the hardware configuration and the license warranty period.